

3/2004

Re: Perpetuatin' Of The Species

Dear Editors,

Oral Robbins (Register Guard, Letters to the Editor, 3/1/2004) seems to feel that gay sexual behavior is a criminal act against Natural Law and the perpetuation of our species. I've got a News Flash for him: with the world population currently around 6.4 billion and growing at 70 million a year, it would appear that humans are doing plenty of perpetuatin' of the species. In fact, I'd say that maybe we non-gays ought to relax just a bit with all this darn tootin' perpetuatin' of the species and instead start worrying about how we're going to feed, clothe and house all these people.

I'd even go so far as to congratulate our gay brothers and sisters in their modest efforts to reduce the number of humans on this overcrowded planet. I only wish that more of us were so altruistically inclined to follow their lead and help prevent overpopulation, and the resultant and inevitable wars, starvation, pollution and general misery, of humans everywhere.

John Donovan
Eugene, OR