

To the User

These notes roughly outline the content of Professor Singell's Contemporary Economics course. The graphs, schedules, and some derivations are excluded in order that the student can develop his or her analytical skills by replicating these exercises executed in class on the provided outline. The actual course content may include some topics that are not covered in this outline and may exclude some topics that are covered in this outline. The student must attend class in order to obtain exact course requirements and content. Thus, these notes are to be viewed broadly as a complement, not a substitute, in production. Moreover, the student must be aware that some errors may remain in the notes for which Professor Singell does not bear responsibility. It would be greatly appreciated if any possible errors discovered by the student are brought to the attention of Professor Singell so that they may be remedied in future versions.